INFRASTRUCTURE
School meals were prepared on school grounds; most schools have electricity, storage areas, and dedicated eating areas. Most have latrines and/or flush toilets. Some schools have clean water; very few have piped water.

SPECIAL NOTES
The numbers for school-age children and their enrollment used in the report were estimated using data from the survey, from UNESCO (2017), and from the national statistics bureau (https://www.bps.go.id/statictable/2014/09/05/1533/ persentase-penduduk-usia-7-24-tahun-menurut-jenis-kelamin-kelompok-umur-sekolah-dan-partisipasi-sekolah-1-2002-2016.html).

GCNF is a non-political, non-profit entity incorporated in 2006. Funding for this survey and a follow-up survey in 2021 is being provided, in part, by the United States Department of Agriculture under agreement number FX18TA-109600002.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Indonesia reported the following positive developments of the PROGAS program: Improved healthy living habits of the students and increased number of school & students targeted by PROGAS. Strengths of the program are that it provided breakfast for students, nutrition education, and the strengthening development of character building (discipline, independence, religious and nationalism).

The program encountered a setback when the allocation per meal per student was decreased based on market prices, but PROGAS needed to increase the number of students targeted. Indonesia also reported the occurrence of a natural disaster during the 2017–18 school year, but said that it did not affect the school feeding program.

Challenges to school feeding in Indonesia involve the sustainability of PROGAS and the question of political will in support of the program.

NOTES:
Cooking groups were paid an incentive of 12% of the 15,000 IDR allocated per student meal per day, to be divided by the total number of cooking group members. The meal cost was about 1.11 USD per meal, so the incentive was about 13 US cents per student meal per day in 2017, divided between the cooks in the group.
